Introduction

In Massachusetts Superior Courts, all cases found guilty are resolved by one of four dispositions. These dispositions are imprisonment, probation, fine or filed. By dividing the total number of convictions into each of these dispositions, disposition rates are obtained. One would assume that these rates would vary not only among the dispositions themselves, but more importantly, the rates would vary depending upon the offense committed. For example, one would expect that imprisonment rates would be high for serious violent offenses like robbery, whereas imprisonment rates would be lower for the offense of driving a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol. Additionally, disposition rates may also change from year to year for various reasons. For example, the number of convictions for the offense of drunkenness vanished in 1972 when the decriminalization went into effect. Using drug offenses as another example, a steady decrease in the number of convictions from 1972 to 1979 is observed.

The purpose of this report is to illustrate variable disposition rates that occur after conviction and furthermore, to demonstrate variations in disposition rates over time and between offense categories. Documentation of the total number of convictions and their dispositions in Massachusetts Superior Courts from the years 1972 to 1979 for twenty four different offense categories is presented. Data has been collected and summarized from Massachusetts Superior Court Return forms which are submitted to the Massachusetts Department of Correction in accordance with the General Laws Chapter 125 Section 8.

TOTAL NUMBER OF CONVICTIONS

Table 1 describes the number of convictions in superior courts from 1972 to 1979 for twenty four different offenses. Also contained in this table is the average number of convictions for each of these offenses for this eight year period. These average number of convictions ranges from 43 individuals for common night walker to 1366 for drug offenses. Trends may be determined by comparing the average to the actual number of convictions. While increasing trends exist for some offenses and decreasing trends exist for others, some offenses demonstrate no trend over this period. The trends for the number of convictions for these offenses are summarized below.

Upward trends have occurred in the number of convictions for the following seven offenses: rape, indecent assault, assault and attempts to murder, assault with a dangerous weapon, kidnapping, arson and for property injuries. Downward trends exist for convictions of abuse of female child, forgery, drug offenses and for driving under the influence of alcohol.

For thirteen of the offenses, neither upward nor downward trends have occurred in the number of superior court convictions. These offenses are manslaughter, robbery, assault and battery, breaking and entering and larceny, possession of burglary tools, larceny, larceny of auto, unlawful appropriation of auto, receiving stolen goods, weapons offenses, common night walker, driving to endanger, and violating motor vehicle laws.

Incarceration Rates

Incarceration rates are obtained by dividing the total number of cases with the disposition of incarceration by the total number of convictions. Table two contains incarceration rates of the Superior Courts from the years 1972 to 1979 classified by twenty four offense categories. Also included in this table are the average incarceration rates for each offense over this eight year period. Incarceration rates vary widely depending upon the offense for which an individual has been convicted. The average incarceration rates for the years 1972 to 1979 range from a high of 74% for manslaughter to a low of 9% for driving under the influence of alcohol.

Five of the offenses have an average incarceration rate over 50%. These offenses are manslaughter, rape, robbery, assaults and attempts to murder, and kidnapping. The following fourteen offenses have average incarceration rates between 25 and 50 percent: indecent assault, abuse of female child, assault with dangerous weapon, assault and battery, arson, breaking and entering and larceny, possession of burglary tools, larceny, forgery, larceny of auto, unlawful appropriation of auto, receiving stolen goods, weapons offenses, and drug offenses. Only five offense have average incarceration rates less than 25%. These offenses are property injuries, common night walker, driving a motor vehicle to endanger, driving under the influence of alcohol and for violating motor vehicle laws.

Upward trends in incarceration rates have occurred for three offenses (abuse of female child, driving to endanger, and driving under the influence of alcohol) whereas downward trends exist for two offenses (assault and attempts to murder, and larceny of auto) over this eight year period. For all other offenses, no trend exists in incarceration rates from the years 1972 to 1979.

Probation Rates

Probation rates are obtained by dividing the total number of cases with the disposition of probation by the total number of convictions. Table three contains probation rates of the Superior Courts from the years 1972 to 1979 classified by twenty four offense categories. Also included in this table are the average probation rates for each offense over this eight year period. Probation rates vary widely depending upon the offense for which an individual has been convicted. The average probation rates for the years 1972 to 1979 range from a low of 17% for violating motor vehicle laws to 56% for the offense of common night walker.

Five offenses have probation rates over 50%. These offenses are abuse of female child, arson, unlawful appropriation of auto, common night walker and drug offenses. The following five offenses have average probation rates lower than 25%: manslaughter, assault and attempts to murder, kidnapping, driving to endanger and for violating motor vehicle laws. The other 14 offenses have probation rates between 25% and 50%.

Upward trends in probation rates have occurred for the offense of driving under the influence of alcohol, whereas downward exist for five offenses (abuse of female child, arson, receiving stolen goods, weapons offenses and drug offenses). For all other offenses, no trend exists in probation rates from the years 1972 to 1979.

Rates For The Disposition Of Filed Cases

Rates for the disposition of filed cases are obtained by dividing the total number of filed cases by the total number of convictions. Table four contains rates for the disposition of filed cases in Massachusetts Superior Courts from the years 1972 to 1979 for twenty four different offenses. Also contained in this table are the average rates for the disposition of filed cases for each offense over this eight year period.

The rates for the disposition of filed cases range from two percent for manslaughter to 33% for violating motor vehicle laws. In general, these rates are lowest for the most serious offenses and highest for the less serious offenses. The rates remain relatively stable over this eight year period except for the year 1978. During the year 1978, significantly higher rates occurred than for any other year.

For the nine person offenses, the average rate for filed cases is 9%, whereas for the nine property offenses, the average rate for the disposition of filed cases is 16%. For the other six offenses listed, the average rate is 18%.

Rates For The Disposition Of Fines

Rates for the disposition of fines are obtained by dividing the total number of cases with the sanction of fines by the total number of convictions. Table five contains rates for the disposition of fines in Massachusetts Superior Courts from the years 1972 to 1979 for twenty four different offense categories. Also included in this table are the average rates for the disposition of fines for each offense over this eight year period.

Of the four dispositions for convictions (incarceration, probation, filed, and fine), the sanction with the lowest overall rates is the disposition of fines. The average rates for fines from the years 1972 to 1979 range from 0.1% for the offense of abuse of female child to 53% for driving a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol.

All but four offenses have average fine rates of 10% or lower. The four offenses with average rates greater than 10% are for common night walker (23%), driving to endanger (50%), driving under the influence of alcohol (53%) and for violating motor vehicle laws (37%). Of these four offense, two offenses (driving to endanger and driving under the influence) demonstrate downward trends in the rates for the disposition of fine, whereas no trend exists for the other two offenses.

Summary

This report documents the total number of convictions in the Massachusetts Superior Courts from 1972 to 1979 for 24 offenses. All convictions must be resolved by one of four dispositions. The four dispositions are imprisonment, fine, filed and probation. Each of these dispositions are broken down according to twenty four offense categories.

The rates of the four dispositions widely vary depending upon the offense for which the individual was convicted. Average rates for the disposition of incarceration range from 9% for driving under the influence to 74% for manslaughter. Average rates for the disposition of filed cases range from 2% for manslaughter to 33% for violating motor vehicle laws. Average probation rates range from 17% for violating motor laws to 56% for common night walker. Average rates for the disposition of fines range from 0.1% for abuse of female child to 53% for driving a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol.

As expected, the more severe dispositions (such as imprisonment) have higher rates for the violent offenses than for the less serious offenses, whereas the less severe dispositions generally have higher rates for the less serious offenses when compared to the violent offenses.

Table six contains a summary of the average disposition rates from Massachusetts Superior Courts from the years 1972 to 1979 classified by twenty four different offense categories.
